San Marcos, California Volunteer Working to Strengthen Afterschool Programs in Davis

Bradley Peterson Joins Eight Other Afterschool Alliance VISTA Volunteers Nationally to Support Afterschool Sustainability and Expand Nutritional Resources

Afterschool programs help working families, keep kids safe and inspire learning. In communities like Davis, they are considered vital resources. But the economic downturn has put a squeeze on programs, causing many to scale back their offerings or even close their doors. Bradley Peterson, an AmeriCorps VISTA volunteer, is working with the Afterschool Alliance to change that.

Along with eight other VISTA volunteers selected from across the country, Peterson is working to increase local participation in free afterschool and summer meals programs. His work includes identifying local resources and needs and collaborating with local and national leaders to strengthen afterschool programs in Davis. He is working closely with the California AfterSchool Network. He began his service in August of this year, and will complete his service in August 2012. Other Afterschool Alliance VISTA volunteers are working to develop local afterschool sustainability plans.

“Today, children and parents depend on high quality afterschool programs to provide engaging hands-on learning opportunities, nutritious and healthy snacks and meals, and opportunities to explore the sciences, arts, physical fitness and more. But many of these same programs are in dire financial straits. That’s why the Afterschool Alliance is delighted to have the support of Bradley Peterson in Davis. We are looking forward to the contributions he will make in helping keep the doors open at afterschool programs, so that more children and families can benefit from all they have to offer,” said Jodi Grant, Executive Director of the Afterschool Alliance.

Peterson is helping to expand participation in the Afterschool Meal and Summer Food Service Programs by increasing the number of afterschool and summer learning programs offering these meals, as well as increasing the number of students participating in the programs. As a VISTA volunteer, he is working with several different communities in California, to identify critical gaps in service and developing plans to increase awareness of the Afterschool Meal and Summer Food Service Programs among afterschool and summer enrichment partners. He is also working with school districts, state level officials, and community advocates to remove barriers to the programs and engage community partners.

The Healthy, Hunger-Free Kids Act of 2010 included a provision to expand the Afterschool Meal program to all states. The Summer Food Service Program is one of the least utilized food assistance programs.

The need for afterschool is great. Research conducted by the Afterschool Alliance has shown that only 19 percent of California's K-12 students are in afterschool programs, while 24 percent care for themselves after the school day ends. Nationally more than 15 million children are unsupervised after the school day ends.
