Kelso High School Student One of Nine in Country to Serve as a Youth Afterschool Ambassador for 2021/2022

Brock Brewer Will Work to Raise Awareness About Importance and Value of Afterschool Programs

Washington, D.C. -- The Afterschool Alliance announced today that Brock Brewer, a student at the Youth and Family Link Afterschool Program and at Kelso High School, is serving in its 2021/2022 class of Youth Afterschool Ambassadors. Brewer is one of just nine students from across the country selected for the honor. He was chosen on the basis of his essay in a competition held earlier this year.

The nine Youth Ambassadors promote the value of afterschool programs by sharing their experiences in these programs and their views about the role afterschool programs play in their communities. They write for the Afterschool Snack, the Afterschool Alliance blog, about the importance of afterschool programs. Several Youth Ambassadors, including Brewer, spoke at a National Youth Town Hall for Lights On Afterschool, the only national rally for afterschool programs, on October 28. The Youth Ambassadors will also connect with members of Congress and their aides as part of the Afterschool for All Challenge next spring.

“We are delighted that Brock is part of this year’s class of Youth Afterschool Ambassadors,” said Jodi Grant, Afterschool Alliance Executive Director. “He has powerful personal experiences that speak to the importance of afterschool programs in his life and the lives of other youth. As the pandemic continues disrupting the lives of so many young people, their schools and communities, it is especially important that we continue to share the benefits these essential programs provide. Afterschool programs keep students safe, inspire them to learn, provide peace of mind to working parents, and also help children re-engage and recover during this difficult time. But too many young people don't have a program available to them. Brock will do a terrific job spreading the word about the need for more support for afterschool programs.”

“I’m so excited to serve as a Youth Afterschool Ambassador,” Brewer said. “When I joined the Youth and Family Link afterschool program in sixth grade, I was battling depression and anxiety and navigating stressful changes in my life. This program changed my life, and the other students and staff became like a family to me. Through hands-on activities such as drawing, painting, and more, I developed my creativity and learned new skills. I’ve also grown as a leader and even traveled to Olympia to share my experience with state senators. Today, I work at Youth and Family Link as a direct service staff member because I want to help other students the way my afterschool mentors helped me. I want all students to have access to the afterschool support I’ve had, and I’m thrilled to work toward that as a Youth Afterschool Ambassador.”

The nine Youth Afterschool Ambassadors in this class come from California, Georgia, Maine, Maryland, New York, Illinois, Utah, Virginia, and Washington. They are:

- Kyla Anderson, from East St. Louis, Illinois’ Southern Illinois University Edwardsville East Saint Louis Charter High School’s 21st Century Community Learning Centers Afterschool Program, age 17

The most recent America After 3PM household survey of more than 31,000 families, commissioned by the Afterschool Alliance, finds that for every child in an afterschool program in the United States, three more are waiting to get in. The families of 24.6 million children — more than ever before — are unable to access a program. Many report cost as a barrier. There are significant inequities, with Black and Latinx children unable to access the afterschool programs their parents want for them.

A large and powerful body of evidence demonstrates improvements in grades, school attendance, behavior and more among children who participate in afterschool programs. Researchers have also found that students in afterschool programs are more engaged in school and excited about learning and develop critical work and life skills such as problem solving, teamwork, and communications.
